TESTIMONIAL

Cynthia Phiri

" I am happy that I was able to be part of this program. Having a title gives me assurance that the place is mine and that my children can inherit. It is something that I am proud of as it gives me and my children security, no one can come and claim the house or even encroach in my boundaries. This gives me motivation to even develop my land," Cynthia Phiri.

Cynthia Phiri, a beneficiary of Systematic Land Titling Under the National Land Titling Project, was able to acquire certificates of title for both of her houses situated in Lusakas Kamwala South and in Kuku Compound.

Many women have benefited from the program as it ensures that not only women's land rights are secured, but also the possibility of attaining other human rights such as education and social security, further contributing to the success of the Sustainable Development Goals.

As Medici Land Governance continues with the systematic land titling program, it remains optimistic on its goal of achieving land governance to the common Zambian who'd have never thought of applying for a title. Surely, the idea of getting their land titled is becoming a reality. Women specifically, stand to get the most out of this program as they will gain their independence and can now boast of being a legal land owner.
